Plagiarism by Special Counsel. What????

Task Force: Whistleblowers Journey:Live in DC

Okay, back in Washington, D.C. I'm trying to keep the camera steady. I've had some complaints on the channel about the shaky camera, and I'm sorry — it's kind of hard to walk and hold it. I don't have all the technical camera stabilizers at my disposal, so I just use my phone.

I'm walking over to meet some people right now. I put out on Twitter, and to some other people, that many are aware it was reported on True Pundit last night by Thomas Paine. The case brought against the twelve Russians for hacking the election — the twelve alleged GRU Russians linked to Vladimir — that whole case, in the language of the case, is plagiarized directly from George Webb's civil lawsuit that was filed over six months ago.

That lawsuit was written by a guy with no legal training — he's not a lawyer — just a citizen based on research and information provided by a large group of citizens. They have followed, researched, and dug into details: bills of lading, ships, travel, fake companies, murders, drug smuggling, human smuggling — you name it.

There are massive gigabytes of information stored in a very productive way. Many people have contributed for two years to put this case together. It was written by citizen journalist George Webb.

I know there's always something going on on the Internet, people fighting about this, but the reality is that case was written and filed as a civil complaint against the Awan spy ring in Congress.

Several cases were served to DOJ brass Rod Rosenstein, FBI brass McCabe, Mueller, Comey, Strzok, Lisa Page, and the Awans. I'm one of the people that personally served Imran Awan, and I had that on video. I sent that out several weeks ago right before his hearing.

We were looking for him for months. I've been to each one of their homes in an attempt to provide service. I talked to Jamal Al-Awan, one of the brothers involved. I met a guy that identified himself as Omar Awan, who is also known as Abid Awan.

At the time, he would only identify himself as Omar, which is curious because an Omar Awan works here in Congress. I've attempted on my channel to find Omar Awan here in Congress numerous times. No one seems to know where he actually works or how to get hold of him.

I finally was able to locate Imran Awan working at Chris Gowen's attorney's office a couple of weeks ago. I had the civil lawsuit and served him on camera. He identified himself as Imran Awan, and as soon as I tried to hand him the paperwork, he pulled his hands back. I let the paperwork fall because he wouldn't catch it, and I told him he had been served.

Interesting enough, the twelve Russians getting indicted yesterday — if you look through the documentation — many parts are literally word-for-word from the civil lawsuit filed against the Awans for hacking Congress and their spy ring.

The only difference is the Awans' names were removed, and Mueller's team inserted the Russians' names instead. It's a massive case of plagiarism.

This lawsuit was attacked on CNN, the New York Times, and I believe the Washington Post as a right-wing conspiracy theory. He's not right-wing, but it was attacked. Now they used the very words of this large document in a criminal indictment against these twelve Russians.

That must mean they've entered this into the court system, which would have to include some significant signature or swearing in to the truth — the whole truth and nothing but the truth — so help them God.

It's very curious that they would use the same exact language, pretty much a cut-and-paste job, especially when Mueller's team has been spending eighteen million dollars and has the best lawyers in the world working on this.

Literally, this document was written by citizen journalists and citizen investigators who uncovered all this stuff. I'm in D.C. now to do some follow-up on that.

Anyone interested can pull a copy of both cases and see how much of it is the same — if not pretty much all of it.

What does plagiarism mean for attorneys who would enter this as evidence or truth? What are the ethics regarding that? What does it mean for top law enforcement officials in our country to be involved in acts of plagiarism and then assert that those facts are attributed to another cast of characters that conveniently fit the narrative they are trying to push?

Especially after the disastrous day that Mr. Peter Strzok had on Capitol Hill in front of Congress two days ago, suddenly out of the blue this case shows up — these twelve random Russians who would never be pulled into court anyway because we have no extradition.

They used the same language that was involved against the Awans, written by a citizen journalist. It looks like a sudden copy-and-paste ordeal has happened here, and we are going to expose what's really happened.

That's why I'm here in D.C. We'll be meeting with some people. I hope that Representatives Jordan and Nunes, Trey Gowdy, DeSantis, Gaetz, Congressman Goodlatte — and all congressmen, Democrats alike — would be very interested in how this event occurred and would earnestly look into it on behalf of the American people.

They should stop the games that have been going on in this city for quite a long time regarding the Russian investigation.

So, checking out for now, and I'll check back in later.
